Background for Teachers

Most plants have a basic structure made up of various plant parts: roots, stems, leaves, flowers, and seeds. Roots anchor the plant to the ground and absorb water and minerals. Stems support leaves and lift them to the sunlight. They conduct water, food, and minerals from the roots to the flowers and leaves. Leaves are the food production sites of the plant. The underside of most leaves have openings where gases are exchanged. Flowers must be pollinated for seeds to form. Pollen is usually carried by the wind or by animals. After pollination, a fruit will develop. Inside the fruit are seeds that will form new plants.

Instructional Procedures

Invitation to Learn

The teacher has a sock with seeds attached to it to generate ideas of how seeds travel.

Instructional Procedures

Teacher does a shared writing as students retell Eric Carle's story The Tiny Seed.
Using the interactive writing procedures, the students will write sentences telling ways seeds travel.
Students will pick one way that seeds travel. They will write one sentence and illustrate it.

Extensions

Possible Extensions/Adaptations

The teacher may choose to have each student use a sock to go on a "gathering walk" and collect seeds.

Family Connections

Students can retell The Tiny Seed and share their writing and illustrations with their family.

Assessment Plan

Teacher assesses students' knowledge as ideas are shared. Teacher also evaluates the writing sample.
