RANGE: Undergraduate Research Journal

Project Summary

The University of Utah first Undergraduate Research Journal was created in 2001 by the then named Undergraduate Research Opportunity Program. In 2012, the program became the Office of Undergraduate Research. In 2015, the Office stopped printing the journal and disseminated the publications as a website. And In 2023, to revitalize the journal into something that could be indexed and archived, under Dr. Fukushima's leadership the journal was revamped to be more collaborative with a student editor, staff, as RANGE: Undergraduate Research Journal. The journal was published for the first time with UEN Pressbooks in 2023. To inaugurate the new platform, the students renamed the journal from Undergraduate Research Journal to RANGE: Undergraduate Research Journal.

- 2023 submissions in 2 issues: 266 student contributions.
- Deadlines twice a year (June and November).
- Fulfills transcript designation: Undergraduate Research Scholar Designation

Why OER

Accessible publication, easy to recirculate, archivable with the University library, easy to download and recirculate.

Future Plans

Currently the journal is organized by college disciplines. In the future, the editors hope to publish the second issue as a research “thematic.”

Advice for using this resource

The journal provides an opportunity to see student research and includes research reflections about their experience.

Advice for using OER – UEN Press Books

UEN Press Books has been super easy to edit as a team. One consideration is that it cannot insert footnotes.
