Background for Teachers

The teacher should make sure all the supplies are available and a clean surface is prepared for making the pie. Cooking in class is a lot of extra work but is definitely worth the trouble. Make sure you know the rules in your school. Check to see if the Principal and Custodian will support this activity before you begin.

Student Prior Knowledge

Students should know how to take turns, help others, and work quietly.

Instructional Procedures

- Read the book Enemy Pie to the whole class.
Stop on page 6 at the third paragraph. Brainstorm as a class to predict what might be the ingredients for Enemy Pie.

Continue reading the story.

Have students return to their desks so that you can prepare the pie. You may want to ask students to come and assist in the different steps.

Follow the directions on the package for the pudding.

Put miniature marshmallows at the bottom of the pie pan and pour the pudding over the top.

While the pie is chilling in the refrigerator, have students write a process paper describing how the pie was made.

Write the ingredients on the board to help the students.

Students need to write the process in detail.

At the end of the activity each student can have a taste of the Enemy Pie.

Strategies for Diverse Learners

Students of all learning abilities should enjoy this activity.

Extensions

Students could write the recipe to take home and try with their families.

Assessment Plan

Read the recipes and process that the students wrote.
