Instructional Procedures

1. Read one or more of the above suggested literature selections.
2. Teacher relates an embarrassing story to the students.
3. Students brainstorm embarrassing experiences in small groups on paper.
4. Assign each child the assignment of writing about an embarrassing moment they have had in their life.
5. Have the students do this in the computer lab where they all have access to Microsoft Word.
6. After each child has written a rough draft have them email it to the teacher.
7. The teacher will then use the collaboration tool in Microsoft word to proofread and make comments on the paper.
8. The teacher will then email it back to the student so they may make corrections.
9. The student emails the final draft back to the teacher.
10. The teacher prints it, grades it, and gives it back to the student.
11. The students share their stories with the class.

Strategies for Diverse Learners

If diverse learners are having trouble with this assignment have them pair up with another student and they can make up their own embarrassing moment paper together. As a pair they can write and correct the narrative.

Assessment Plan

The teacher will assess the student by reading the rough and final draft of the student making sure that they made the corrections suggested and followed the rubric.
